Monument to a Heart of Stone

OVERALL VIEW of stone mansion shows room areas separated by paths and landscaping. In foreground is table shaped like state of Florida, complete with hole filled with water representing Lake Okechobee. (Metro Group Photos)

Because his girl friend was stony-hearted and rejected his proposal, Ed Leedskalnin spent the next 30 years of his life building a stone monument to her flinty memory. Working alone with homemade tools, the unrequited lover moved and molded some 1,000 tons of coral rock into the shape of a house complete with front door and furniture, on U.S. Highway 1, 25 miles south of Miami, Florida. Though some of the megaliths weigh as much as 28 tons, many can be tipped or tilted by a child, so finely were they hewn. The gigantic door of the house swings easily like the stone entrance to Ali Baba's cave. Inside, the stone furnishings of the roofless establishment look forbidding and hard, but they too are delicately balanced and surprising-y comfortable. Rocking chairs and love seats that rock, dinner table and chairs, bathtub, sundial, sun-bathing platform and various objects d'art are fashioned of stone and carved to a rough perfection. A romantic all his life, Leedskalnin hoped the heavens would send back his lady love in the course of time, and many pieces dedicated to and depicting the sun, moon and stars abound in the house. As it turned out, fortune did not shine on the broken-hearted sculptor, and he died in 1951 with the secret of his heroine's identity unspoken. But his monument to her bids fair to stand for a long time.

OUTDOOR TUB BATH of primitive construction is used by visitor. Stairway makes getting into and out of tub easy, and the inside is no harder on bather than porcelain.

STONE DOOR weighing nine tons, yet so perfectly balanced a child can turn it was installed by Leedskalnin without outside help. It is set in a gate 2½ feet thick.

A VISITOR SUNBATHES on a turntable platform that revolves at the flick of a wrist. Perfectly balanced rock is mounted on mechanism of discarded auto parts to help it turn easily.
